

Schultz & Larsen recommend that you do not put solvents near the barrel. Solvents do not only attack copper and long term will eat into the surface of the bore. If the bore is thoroughly purged of any solvent residue and lightly oiled it would come to no harm but best to not use solvents at all.

Every S&L Barrel is cut to the same high standard regardless of it's outer profile

Schultz & Larsen barrels are cut rifled and every barrel is lapped. There is no need to “shoot in”, just take it out and start using it. The bore after lapping is micro rifled. Micro rifling are the very fine longitudinal grooves left in the surface after lapping. This micro rifling, together with the slight choke in the muzzle helps prevent copper fouling. The maker says you probably don't have to do a thorough clean until 300 rounds. This will vary depending on calibre and load.

Cleaning procedure is to simply wipe out any fouling after use and then wipe the bore through with a light oil to prevent rust and that is it. If copper fouling does start to appear just scrub with a phosphor bronze brush to remove. The easiest and quickest way to clean is with the VFG felt system. Standard white felt to wipe through and remove fouling. Super Intensive green felt to remove copper. The Super Intensive felts have particles of phosphor bronze embedded in the felt. No more abrasive but more effective because the felt goes right into the bottom and corners of the grooves.
